Project Goals:

1. Provide students with access to reading materials that are interesting and relevant to their interests and curriculums to increase school-wide literacy.
2. Create a media center that promotes collaboration and cooperative learning among students and once again brings the library media center back to the heart of education in order to see gains in AP enrollment, AP scores, and ACT scores.
3. Construct a makerspace designed to provide students with the opportunities to become creative, innovative, and risk-takers to prepare them for post-secondary opportunities and increase not only their ACT composite scores but also their STEM ACT scores.
4. Afford opportunities for students to become advocates for traditional literacy, presentation literacy, and information literacy.

Project Purpose and Rationale:

Students are learning much differently than they have in previous years, and a large part of this can be attributed to advancements in technology. It has changed the way students look for information and the pedagogies of educators. In Greene County Schools, our libraries look much the same as they did in the 1950s and 60s; however, the needs of students have changed greatly since that time. In response to a need to evolve with students and/or patrons, libraries have begun adding makerspaces. In a makerspace, students may create, invent, and learn at his or her own pace to produce a high-definition video clip, print a 3D model, build a robot, repair a computer, create a piece of vinyl art, or even fix a hem on pair of pants. These makerspaces have increased library patronage while at the same time allowing students multiple means of demonstrating what they have learned from their classes and demonstrate innovation beyond the standard curriculum. Although these projects and their needed tools are diverse, they reflect the needs and interests of the C-DHS students. It is Chuckey-Doak High School's mission to provide quality instruction to students to help them become life-long learners and contributors to their communities.

While the school holds high standards, the student population of C-DHS is unfortunately on the majority economically disadvantaged with 57.7% qualifying free or reduced lunch in 2015. However, according to Hancock (2003), a strong library program that is adequately staffed, resourced and funded can lead to higher student achievement regardless of the socio-economic or educational levels of the adults in the community; test scores are higher when there is higher usage of the school library; collaborative relationships between classroom teachers and school librarians have a significant impact on learning, particularly in relation to the planning of instructional units; a print-rich environment leads to more reading and free voluntary reading is the best predictor of comprehension, vocabulary growth, spelling and grammatical ability and writing style; libraries can make a positive difference in students' self-esteem, confidence, independence and sense of responsibility in regards to their learning. It is by updating the library that C-DHS wishes to provide equality in terms of student access to materials and lay the foundation for students to build a love of reading and creating, which will blossom into a love of learning.

The major purposes behind this project are to improve the student resources in the school library, construct a comfortable space within the library that promotes reading, and increase student use of the library. Because much of the library's holdings and the library itself are dated, there is a desperate need for an update to bring it into the twenty-first century to realize the library's potential as a media center. In order to move the library into the more modern media center, C-DHS needs to add new technologies in the form of a makerspace along with updating the library collection and furnishings. By doing this, it is our hope that more student collaboration will occur for project-based learning, more teacher collaboration that will build cross-curricular connections, and more students will become the promoters of various types of literacy. According to Barrett (2010), achievement scores increase when the number of professional librarians and support staff are present; quality information is distributed from the library into the homes and classrooms; the school librarian encourages reading; collaboration occurs between the librarian and the faculty; information literacy skills are taught; and school librarians are leaders within their schools (p. 136). In regards to this, C-DHS wants to begin to promote these ideas among the students and staff by encouraging collaboration among the faculty, students, and school librarian. However, limited resources have hindered our abilities to offer such programs.

Project Objective/Activities:

Describe the objective of the project; what the project is to achieve, create, deliver. Please identify who will derive a direct benefit from the outcome. Be specific.

Engaging literacy is one of the largest challenges for the twenty-first century classroom or library. Nonetheless, it can be done but it requires inviting students and providing chances to see the value of wanting education. To pique students' interests, one plan of action is to give the library a "face lift" so that students want to visit the space. Bookstores and libraries are popular locations for students to congregate simply because they have cafés, the space is inviting, and they offer various activities related to learning. In short, it is the atmosphere readers seek. The reality is a book store like Barnes and Noble is not in Greeneville, and our local library is limited in terms of the opportunities it affords teenagers. Furthermore, many of our students do not come from a background that provides with them with the luxury of visiting such a place which does. However, it can become a daily opportunity with the transformation of the C-DHS school library. We want to provide a service and a product our students both want and need in a comfortable environment that invites students to enjoy a literary experience and share that experience with peers and the community. Our students not only need books and tools but motivation to read, explore, and create. They need to see the value of what a book and solid research can offer by making literacy truly a hands-on experience, but the first step must be to convince them to come in the door because the reality, as cliché as it may be, is we do judge books by their covers. Therefore, we would like to incorporate a book lover's café into the library, create a literary lounge which will be home-like space where students would feel encouraged to "curl up with a good book," add student-created murals and art, and add a makerspace. Furthermore, it is our hope that monies made from the café could assist in maintaining funds for our collection and makerspace, much like has been the case for other high schools in our region.

In addition to creating a more inviting space, another key strategy in building literacy skills is to incorporate the makerspace, which would allow students to explore real-world challenges and encourage collaboration for project-based research and learning. In both the library and in English Language Arts classrooms, it is our hope that the students will be interested in working with technology to promote books they are reading either in their ELA classes or for pleasure by making book trailers (much like movie previews), creating posters, and simply sharing their reviews. Having students create the promotional material and sharing such will increase students' interest in reading while developing essential skill sets—traditional literacy, information literacy, and presentation literacy. One idea is to encourage students to write proposals and scripts and gain approval from their teacher(s) and/or the librarian before using the green screen and media equipment in the makerspace. By having to create these “book trailers,” students will be doing research and thinking more critically than they would with the standard pencil and paper assignment. They will be performing and see the text and their ideas come to life: this concept allows for a total engagement of nearly all forms of literacy. By requiring such, traditional literacy, information literacy, and presentation literacy are all promoted within the makerspace. These promotional videos could then be aired as commercials on the school's news broadcast, which is produced by the future C-DHS audio-visual course that will share equipment with the library's makerspace. Moreover, this media aspect of the makerspace would create opportunities not only for the future audio-visual course and English classes but also for science teachers, especially those teaching AP Biology and AP Chemistry. In the sciences, it would be ideal to have students create “videos and/or podcasts” of their experiments to bring learning to “the green screen.” With such technology, the students could share their videos, which could limit the expense of AP labs without sacrificing quality education. In keeping with the popularity of the school's growing choral program, C-DHS would like to add a musical component to the makerspace. Students could write, record, and produce their own musical creations and share those with the student body. These same presentation concepts could be easily applied to various other disciplines within the school. Our students desperately lack information literacy and presentation literacy, both of which are critically related to traditional literacy. They fail to understand appropriate, reliable websites and other research media. By giving them the chance to share projects, we encourage them to seek accuracy and understanding of not only what they have read but also of what they have learned.

With the makerspace, we have a desire to create an additional science and technology connection with a 3D printer, which will be an in-kind contribution from Greene County. However, a computer will still be needed to operate the printer and its software. We realize a 3D printer would encourage students to create awesome designs that could be brought into existence. For example, a student in AP Chemistry could build a 3D model of a molecule to add a professional visual to his/her report or presentation. Students participating in the engineering classes could see their CAD drawings become full models with the addition of such. Their designs could go from the conceptual to tangible. In addition to the 3D printer and its awesome capabilities, C-DHS would like to add makerspace electronics so that students can learn to code and build; products like Arduino, Lego Mindstorms, MakeyMakey, Drawdio, and Raspberry Pi are current considerations. It is with the makerspace that C-DHS hopes that students will take an interest in STEM related classes, and the school will see an increase in ACT scores.

Another idea C-DHS is considering is reordering the library's holdings. The library is organized as traditional Dewey Decimal. However, in regards to increasing circulation of books, other libraries in our region have re-structured their libraries' fiction section to be in genres, which has in turn increased their circulation statistics. This is also true for other libraries including public ones such as the Charlotte Mecklenburg Library in Charlotte, North Carolina. Keeping this in mind, the library at C-DHS would like to change from the traditional Dewey organization to this genre-based structure to emulate their successes. Furthermore, it is also our desire to add new titles to our collection so that students feel encouraged to read pieces that are of high interest to them and inspire their creativity.

Finally, one necessary aspect for turning the library into a true media center that invites collaboration is to have mobile furniture and a mobile lab with laptops capable of performing the functions of desktops. There is a lab within the library but its machines are dated, resulting in limited capabilities. Also, the lab is fixed, which does not allow students to collaborate with each other as they must remain in front of their single computer. By allowing for laptops and mobile furniture, this is easily changed. In Jennifer Gonzales' article, she claims her library increased its student usage by one thousand percent by working to develop personalized learning for students. With a mobile lab and furniture conducive to collaboration, C-DHS can do the same. According to the article, "On an average day, over a hundred students will visit to work on projects, make use of interactive technologies, film and edit videos, and yes, check out books." In this, it is obvious that the technology is key to bringing students into the space and the furniture is the ticket to the collaboration. With a makerspace, new books, and an inviting space that caters to students' needs, C-DHS will make strides in educating our students and developing their literacy skills.

Strategic Context:

The major purposes of this project are to increase traditional literacy, informational literacy, and presentation literacy at Chuckey-Doak High School in an effort to be able to increase our Advancement Placement course offerings so that the school can see an improvement in not only its ACT scores, especially STEM, but also the school-wide literacy scores. C-DHS students deserve to be educated to their fullest potential so that they are truly college and career ready. Advancement Placement courses rely on the premise of challenging high school students to perform on a collegiate level in pursuance of a college credit, and a makerspace and encouragement to read afford students those self-directed opportunities. For the AP student, he or she must be able to read, write, research, and think critically beyond the standard curriculum, which again are skill sets the makerspace fosters. A 2009 study by the College Board boasts the following:

For example, a study by Willingham and Morris (1986) found that students who took an AP Exam, regardless of performance, were more likely to earn a B average during their first year of college as compared to students who did not take any AP Exams. This was true even after controlling for academic ability. Furthermore, a study by Dougherty, Mellor, and Jian (2006) found that students who performed well (i.e., earned a score of 3 or higher) on at least one AP Exam in English, mathematics, science, or social studies were more likely to graduate from college in five years as compared to students who took no AP Exams, who received a score of 1 or 2, or who took an AP course but not the corresponding exam. Additionally, students who scored a 1 or 2 graduated at a higher rate than the "No AP" group. Again, this was true even after controlling for academic ability and other student or school characteristics (Mattern, Shaw, & Xiong, 2009).

From this, it is obvious that a means of offering students post-secondary opportunities is to prepare them all for AP level courses in order to make them truly college and career ready. Unfortunately, one of C-DHS's primary concerns is many students are not reading at the levels needed to be successful in high school, which puts them at a major deficit for post-secondary education. A second concern is students' abilities to work collaboratively in groups to complete long-term projects. Therefore, it limits advanced placement opportunities as students are not prepared for the programs and are under-achieving on the ACT. In order to address these concerns, C-DHS wants capitalize research and findings related to school libraries, which could in turn focus on creating an environment that promotes many forms literacy and research competency.

Project Timeline:

State the proposed timeline for the completion of this project.

Spring/Summer 2017:

- Heavily weed the library to remove dated materials.
- Consult and collaborate with other regional libraries about popular book holdings.
- Remove larger bookshelves to open the space so that students have room to collaborate with each other for projects.
- Consult with students about designs for library murals. One senior has asked for it to be her service learning project; she is in the process of designing a mural.
- Paint murals in the library.
- Restructure the library's circulation desk to act as the barista's station.
- Purchase the coffee station for the book lover's café.
- Develop a literary latte menu among other coffee drinks and hot chocolates
- Reorganize the fiction section into genres.

Fall 2017:

- Set up a Twitter account for the school library that promotes materials and opportunities found in the school library.
- Set up the "Literacy Lounge," "the Book Lover's Café" and makerspace (begin in the spring and summer).
- Collaborate with ELA, journalism, and the audio-visual courses in order to promote books

Spring 2018

- A newly designed media center

Data Collection/Monitoring:

C-DHS will collect data in the form of circulation statistics, use of the makerspace, AP and ACT scores, and TN Ready Testing. In addition to these, we can also trace the success of our students from the clearinghouse program that was afforded to us from another grant.

Sustainability Plan:

As previously mentioned, it is our hope that the café can help to provide funds to maintain the activities in the maker space. In addition to this, the library will take part in fundraising activities such as book fairs, seek partnerships and sponsors within the community, and continually search for other grant opportunities to expand our program. Furthermore, Greene County Schools does provide the library with approximately $4.00 per student, which will be used to maintain the book collections as well as other materials.
